Dear Professor Heintz:

I called today and asked the office to give you a message saying I would come to the colloquium next Fall. I hope you got the message, since I was afraid I had delayed too long in answering. I decided not to do the other thing I mentioned to you, so I can undertake it. From our conversation, I assume that Stanley Moore will do the main paper related somehow to the book, or whatever, and that I am to reply as best I can, though I need prepare nothing for publication. The last pleases me since I worry very much about trying to write something with publication in mind.

Thanks ever so much for inviting me and I look forward to the colloquium.

Yours sincerely,

John Rawls
